

Thesis statement EXAMPLES for ancient civilizations in World History

1. Three characteristics that separated the (name the culture) from all other ancient civilizations was their ability to (name a characteristic), (name a second characteristic), and (name a third characteristic).
2. Ancient (name a culture's) structure of government helped their people develop (name a development), (name a second development), and (name a third development).
3. (name the civilization or culture) was a violent culture because they (name what they did), (name a second thing they did), and (name a third thing they did).
4. An analysis of the ancient civilization of (name the civilization) reveals that they made three important mistakes, (name a mistake they made), (name a second mistake they made), and (name a third mistake they made), that ultimately triggered the downfall of their empire.
5. (name the civilization) was a peaceful culture because they (name what they did), (name a second thing they did), and (name a third thing they did).
6. The ancient civilization of (name the ancient civilization) should not have invaded (name the ancient civilization) because it (name a result), (name a second result), and (name a third result).
7. Building the (name the ancient culture) culture took thousands of years and required the development of (name a development), (name a second development), and (name a third development).

Thesis statements for important discoveries, achievements, or incidents in World History

8. In the (name of time period) century, the ancient civilization of (name of civilization) used (name a tool), (name a second tool), and (name a third tool) to show force against neighboring cultures.
9. The ancient culture of (name culture) contributed to world history because they developed (name a historical development), (name a second historical development), and (name a third historical development).
10. Farming in ancient (name an ancient civilization) helped solved food problems, but also ontributed to the development of (name a development), (name another development), and (name a last development).
11. (name a development), and (name a last development).
12. In the (name time period) century, the ancient civilization of ( name of civilization) used (name an invention or achievement), (name a second invention or achievement), and (name a third invention or achievement) to become one of the greatest cultures of history.
13. The (name historical incident or war) was a disaster for the ancient civilizations of (name civilization) because it (describe an effect), (describe a second effect), and (describe a third effect).

Thesis statements for important people in World History

14.           (name an important person in world history)           was an influential person in history because he           (name one of his accomplishments)          ,           (name a second of his accomplishments)          , and           (name a third of his accomplishments)          .

15.           (name of important person in history)           developed greatness for the ancient culture of           (name culture)           through           (name one of his achievements)          ,           (name a second of his achievements)          , and           (name a third of his achievements)          .

16. During the           (name time period)          ,           (name an important person in history)           demonstrated his traits as a leader through such accomplishments as           (name one of his accomplishments)          ,           (name a second of his accomplishments)          ,           (name a third of his accomplishments)          .

Thesis Statements

1. Three characteristics that separated the Roman culture from all other ancient civilizations was their ability to build an extensive aqueduct system, develop advanced weaponry and military tactics, and architectural techniques that were considered advanced for the time.
1. The Roman Empire displays characteristics that lead to its consideration as one of the most advanced civilizations in human history. Their empire extended as far north as France, Germany and Great Britain to as far south as northern Africa. To the west it extended into the Iberian Peninsula and as far east as the modern-day Middle East. Empires that span vast land areas can be true of other ancient civilizations, however. Three characteristics that separate the Roman culture from all other ancient civilizations were their ability to build an extensive aqueduct system, develop advanced weaponry and military tactics, and architectural techniques that were considered advanced for the time.